It is disappointing to see these regulations being proposed, especially since public charter schools have been a Godsend to so many families over the past 18 months. Those who continue to push for more regulation and funding cuts seem to have self-serving motives that aren't as pure as they try to portray. Public charter schools provide options to families who otherwise would not have options, like those who are economically disadvantaged and those from minority populations. We should be seeking more ways to improve public education, not way to overregulate the limited options we already have.

Thank you for your time,

Alyssa McEntee
