

To Whom it May Concern:

Many children start preschool at 3 or 4 years of age, with an immature immune system. They are suddenly exposed to many other children in close quarters, where an explosion of germs and viruses cannot fail to occur. Gentle exposure to the harmless bacteria found in raw milk products such as butter can train their immune systems how to respond to these larger threats.

Raw butter should be clearly labelled so consumers know what they are getting, and then the choice should be left to each individual to decide. After all, many products such as soft drinks which everyone agrees are unhealthy, can still legally be sold. Why take away people's choice to buy raw butter, a product that has never been proven to cause harm, and which many people, including me, believe does much good?
